

CLAIMS

What is claimed is:

1. A women's undergarment comprising:

a generally triangular shaped front panel having a tapered crotch region and a wider upper frontal portion, said upper frontal portion having a strap attached at each apex for supporting the panel; said tapered crotch region having a strap attached at the lower apex of said front panel; wherein said straps converge at a point near the posterior of the person wearing the undergarment and below the waistline of the person.
2. A thong-type low-cut undergarment for women comprising:

a wedge shaped panel having a top which is adapted to extend up above the woman's crotch area but remain below the waist, and also having one point of said wedge shaped panel attached to a strap extending rearward between the user's legs; and wherein said panel comprises a thong having a first strap attached at the top of the panel adapted to fit about the user's waist and also having a second strap adapted to extend below the user's crotch and being securely connected to said first strap at a point on the posterior of the user at or below approximately the circumferential midline of the user's posterior.

3. A women's thong undergarment comprised of:

a wedged shape front panel, upper support straps extending from the wider, upper portion of the front panel extending about the wearer below the wearer's waist, the narrow end of the panel extending below the wearer's crotch and supported by a lower strap extending between the wearer's legs up to a point behind the wearer joining the upper support straps and attaching at said point with an approach angle of about 120 degrees (120°) in relation to each other strap.

4. The women's thong undergarment of claim 3 wherein further the upper portion of said wedged shape front panel does not rise up above the wearer's lower waist and provides for said upper support straps to encircle the wearer's body below the hipline and connects with said lower strap at a point below the top of the buttocks of the user.
